Well Known Minister Believes Boy Who Has His Living to Make and Cannot Go to School Should Have Chance

Archdeacon W. E. Warren had some decided remarks to make about vocational training in high schools today. Dr. Warren has had considerable experience in educational & his and his views on the subject are of the more interest on that account. He has assisted as many as 24 boys in their efforts to secure schooling, and it was he who was largely responsible for the adoption of vocational courses in the city schools of Jacksonville, Fla.

"I can hardly see," said the clergyman today, "why the benefit to pupils of the fifth grade come in, when the move so many as ten students a year, as is the case in our present system of city schools. There cannot be meat in so many courses for so young a mind. Our schools are devised to help the student who is preparing for college. There can be no doubt about this. But for the boy who has to get out and go into business at about the end of the eighth grade our system might almost be called a burden and a drawback.

"A boy must now take three years of high school work before he can get a chance at commercial courses in the university, and he can get no commercial work at all in the high school. When we consider the number of boys who are surrounded by the necessity of making a living for themselves at once, it is difficult to conceive the justice of such a system.

"Of course there are the business colleges, and the denominational schools. These are all very well, but when we have a public school equipment that is being paid for by the taxes of our own people why not let our own people benefit by them to the extent of providing suitable commercial courses to meet the necessities. I know what your educators will say. They will say it takes a trained mind to meet the strain of competition in the world today. They will say that we need algebra and trigonometry and chemistry, perhaps, to make an up-to-date business man. Through these things may sometimes help, and I doubt it, the fact remains that three months instead of three years spent upon the basic essentials will serve to form a foundation of as thorough a business training as is needed in nine-tenths of the positions in which the young business man finds himself today.

"Supposing these things were desirable, it does not alter the fact that a 'short-cut' is needed by a great number of our boys—that without it they will miss their opportunity. Give me the average boy of high school age three months for his training. I will teach him business arithmetic, ordinary penmanship, review his grammar and start him into book-keeping in the business college way and the first thing you know he will be a capable and energetic business man.

ENTHUSIASM RUNS RIFE AT VARSITY ASSEMBLY

Lawrence Lee, Former Football Manager and "Doc" Cornish, Former Star Quarter back for U. N. M. Make Optimistic Speeches.

The first assembly of the year was held on the university campus this morning. It was given over to a student enthusiasm meeting. Football plans were discussed and the general outlook for the year was summarized by student speakers. The assembly closed with a rousing college yell rally, led by Lawrence F. Lee, an alumnus of the college of liberal arts and a former manager of the football team.

Miss Evelyn Everett, secretary of the student body, presided, in the absence of Charles Lembeck, president of that organization, who was unable to be present. Mr. Lee told of the early struggles of football teams and of the steady advance of the university to supremacy in the state, and explained the cause of several recent reverses that the team has experienced. He declared the university to be on the eve of the brightest era in her history, and cited the excellent athletic outlook as an example of what may be expected this year.

"We have the men here to make a good team this year," said Mr. Lee. "What we need is to get together and hit the ball. I mean we must all go in for team work and we'll have the biggest year that has ever been heard of on this old hill." Cheers followed Lee's speech. "Doc" Cornish, former U. N. M. quarterback and quarterback for Yale's freshman team the past year, was called to the rostrum. The first cheer meeting of the year followed, L. F. Lee taking charge of it.

The position of manager of the U. N. M. student weekly was filled, Charles Weber being elected to this responsible trust by a unanimous vote. Mr. Weber is a college freshman whose work as reporter and associate on the college publication last year made a record. He has had considerable managerial experience and the student body feels that his selection is a most fortunate one for the interests of the institution.

Today was the first of the regular Thursday morning assemblies to be held during the 1911 period. Besides student meetings and public programs, President E. McQueen Gray plans a series of lectures for the assembly period by prominent speakers from all parts of the state.

The principal subject to be discussed is understood to be the proposal to turn public lands over to the states, to be administered as the state governments may direct. The general policies of the federal government in regard to public lands will be informally discussed, as will a number of particular regulations. Among these are the reservation of government forests. The modus of the general conservation policy will be entered into by the delegates to the convention.

The mighty St. Lawrence River is fourth among the rivers of the world in volume of flow. In reckoning its drainage area geographers count the Great Lakes, the largest bodies of fresh water in the world, as part of the river, yet the St. Lawrence is more salt than fresh. From the little inlet at the mouth of the river to Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior, is 2,881 miles, every foot of the distance navigable by large vessels by means of several stretches of canal. The headwaters of the St. Lawrence rise midway between the Atlantic and the Pacific, though the river proper extends only from the outlet of Lake Ontario to the sea, a distance of 1,173 miles. At its mouth it is seventy miles wide, while in few places below Quebec it is less than two miles wide. Nowhere below the rapids is the natural channel less than thirty feet deep except over fifty miles of shoals, where Dutchmen dredges have broken all the world's records in dredging channels deep enough to accommodate great ocean liners. The tourist-haunted Rhine is so shallow that the little steamboats that navigate it are obliged to run under slow nets for a large part of the way between Mainz and Cologne. The St. Lawrence is navigable for ocean liners to Montreal, 386 miles from the gulf, the further inland a ship can go, the farther north it can sail—Charles Frederick Carter in Travel.

MANY DELEGATES TO ATTEND THE DENVER LANDS CONVENTION

Francis G. Tracy, of Carlsbad, to Be Principal Speaker for New Mexico; Important Subjects to Be Discussed.

New Mexico will be well represented at the Public Lands convention at Denver on the 28-29-30 of September. Fifteen or sixteen delegations will represent the state there, and a number of men interested in public land problems will doubtless accompany the delegation. Francis G. Tracy of Carlsbad will be the principal speaker from New Mexico. R. P. Irving, commissioner of public lands, is taking an active part in organizing the representatives to the convention.

New Mexico will stand third in the number of delegates this state ranking third in the possession of public lands within its borders. On July 1 of this year the number of acres of public land in New Mexico was placed roughly as 2,000,000. Montana ranks first and Arizona second in the possession of public lands.

The conference in Denver will be attended by President Tait, Secretary of the Interior Fisher and former Secretary Ballinger. Gifford Pinchot will be one of the interested participants.

The principal subject to be discussed is understood to be the proposal to turn public lands over to the states, to be administered as the state governments may direct. The general policies of the federal government in regard to public lands will be informally discussed, as will a number of particular regulations. Among these are the reservation of government forests. The modus of the general conservation policy will be entered into by the delegates to the convention.
